Munich Nazi Trial Is First Of Number Of Women

Fourteen German women sat in the dock at Munich assizes, accused of taking part in Nazi war crimes. All nurses, now in their fifties and sixties, they are alleged to have taken part in Hitler's euthanasia campaign as members of the staff of an asylum at Obrawalde, Brandenburg, says the London Times, where at least 8,000 mentally sick or incurable patients were put to death with drugs between 1942 and 1945.

The four principal accused face individual charges of causing the death of women patients in from 150 to 210 cases, the others between 85 and three cases. Nine of the fourteen accused were working as nurses in west German hospitals when inquiries started against them in 1961.

This is the first big war crimes trial to be held in the Federal Republic involving women, except for the proceedings against Ilse Koch, of Buchenwald, who is now serving a life sentence imposed by a west German court in 1951.

With the collapse of the Sawade-Heyde euthanasia trial last year (Werner Heyde, alias Sawade, was found hanged in his cell before the trial), it is hoped this trial will shed valuable light on the euthanasia campaign in which an estimated 250,000 people died.

The investigations for this trial have apparently brought to light that Nazi "mercy killing", officially stopped by Hitler in 1942, after public protests from relatives, was in fact continued secretly, and outside concentration camps, at "asylums" like Obrawalde.

"I believe I am innocent because the action was ordered from the highest quarter," Luise Erdmann, now aged sixty-three, and unmarried, from Wasserburg, Bavaria, told the all male jury. "I wish my mother had died in this way. The patients had a humane death. She died among the Russians."

According to the prosecution, as a ward sister, Erdmann took part in 210 killings either by injecting morphine in fatal quantities or preparing and administering luminal or veronal tablets, or by or-

Rejection Of Jew From Asia And Africa By Jew From Europe Is Threat To Israel As Grave As Arab Threat

The twelve tribes of the Old Testament have been replaced in modern Zion by two loose and somewhat antagonistic communities. Therein lies the story of racial discrimination in Israel.

Premier Levi Eshkol has described as "a central problem in our lives" the social, cultural and economic differences that divide the Ashkenazi, or European, Jews from the Sephardic Jews, in Israeli terminology those from Asia and Africa, says W. Granger Blair, in the New York Times. Some see in this a potential threat to the existence of Israel at least as grave as that posed by her Arab neighbors.

If there is disagreement about the extent of discrimination directed for the most part by the more advanced Ashkenazim against the Sephardim, there is no disagreement that it exists.

However, at a recent discussion of the problem in the Knesset (Parliament) Sephardi and Ashkenazi alike agreed that discrimination, where it existed openly, was never officially condoned and that it did not extend to the Government.

Thus discrimination apparently is most frequently encountered by the Sephardim in ordinary day-to-day living, in the struggle for employment and economic advancement and in the quest for social equality with the more favored elements of Israel's heterogeneous population.

A dark-skinned Yemenite boy was in tears and his mother was deeply hurt after he had been taunted [illegible] by a group of white-skinned Ashkenazi youngsters at a public swimming pool. "Cushi," the Biblical term for Negro, has taken on the same perjorative meaning in Israel as "nigger" in the United States.

A Government official who had gone to an army camp to speak about discrimination was interrupted. "We have no discrimination problem," said the young Sephardi soldier. "There isn't an Ashkenazi in our outfit."

In fact there is little discrimination in the Israeli Army. But, as Premier Eshkol has pointed out, says the New York Times, "during the years of their service our soldiers have become accustomed to a society in which barriers have fallen, but they do not always find the same situation when they return to civil life."

One hears of family crises arising when a boy and a girl, one Ashkenazi and the other Sephardi, fall in love and want to marry. Parental opposition to such "mixed marriages" on both sides may help explain in part why the small number of inter-communal marriage has increased only five per cent in more than a decade.

A Moroccan busboy in one of the country's leading hotels expressed disappointment with Israel as a land of equal opportunity. He maintained that the cards were stacked against the new immigrant unless he arrived with money, education, or position, which is rarely the case among the Sephardim.

Some Israelis believe the base of the iceberg of intolerance extends deep beneath the surface. One of these is Michael Selzer, a twenty-four-year-old writer who was born in India and holds a degree in Oriental studies from Oxford University.

In a passionate attack against racial discrimination designed to arouse the consciences of the delegates to the recent World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem, says the New York Times, Mr. Selzer wrote: "Everything in me revolts against the hatred and the scorn and the prejudice which I find my Ashkenazi brothers freely express against my Sephardi brothers — in this, which was to have been the Jewish state! Consciously and unconsciously, in great matters of State and in careless words dropped without thought — everywhere I have found this rejection of Jew by Jew."

Other Israelis take a less extreme view of the situation. They deplore discrimination.

But they see it as the inevitable, if temporary outgrowth of a pattern in which the educated and economically well off "Western" Jews who run the country are under increasing pressure from the poorly educated and economically feeble "Oriental" Jews who now are on the verge of constituting a majority of the population.

They feel that patience and understanding, together with an expansion of the already substantial efforts under way to better social, economic, and especially educational opportunities for the Sephardim, says the New York Times, the problem ultimately can be resolved.

ISRAEL IN MIDST OF ARAB STATES JUST NOT NATURAL, SAYS IRAQI PRESIDENT ON RADIO

The possibility of war between the Arab states and Israel is a constant topic among Arab politicians, diplomats, and other observers in the Middle East.

The increased tension has grown out of Israeli diversion of waters from the Jordan River and out of Arab plans for counter-diversion of the headwaters. As a by-product, many Arabs feel, according to Dana Adams Schmidt, of the New York Times, that relations between the Arab states generally and the United States have reached their lowest ebb since 1956, when Secretary of State John Foster Dulles withdrew United States aid for the Aswan High Dam.

These Arabs maintain that the United States is backing Israel and the Soviet Union is backing the Arab world.

They see Ambassador-at-large W. Averell Harriman as an emissary whose visit to Israel appears intended to placate the Israelis over their loss of West German arms aid.

In Cairo, they see President Gamal Abdel Nasser, the most powerful of the Arab leaders, welcoming Walter Ulbricht, the East German President, thereby defying the pro-Western Government in Bonn.

In Damascus they see the hanging of Farhan Attassi, a naturalised American citizen, in a public square. And the court summaries in the Attassi espionage case, taken with comments in the Damascus radio and press, indicated to many that what the Syrians meant to hang was not a man but the United States Government.

This is one aspect of Syrian policy on which there is no criticism from any Arab quarters, not even from Cairo, which is normally antagonistic toward Damascus's Baath party leadership.

In Baghdad, Iraq, President Abdel Salam Arif said, in a broadcast statement: "There is no doubt that the final battle with Israel is coming. It is inevitable. The presence of Israel in the midst of the Arab states is just not natural."

In Beirut, Michel Abu Jawdeh, a commentator for the influential and independent newspaper Al Nahar, remarked recently, says the New York Times, that there seemed to be the threat of "a United States Suez"; three pro-Nasser newspapers and the Damascus radio echoed the phrase.

The weekly newspaper Al Sayyad, of Beirut, put the idea into a cartoon. The first panel showed "the old trio" of allies against Egypt — Israel, Britain, and France. The second panel showed "the new trio" of allies against Arabs generally — Israel, West Germany, and the United States.

Much of the argument about the danger of war has centered on statements by Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara and by President Nasser.

Mr. McNamara said: "Violence may flare up at any time over Israel's diversion of the waters of the Jordan River. Arab counter diversion plans. So far, Arab reaction to Israel's diversion has been reasonably muted. A principal United States objective has long been to keep the feud from escalating into overt hostilities.

"The realization of this objective has been made more difficult by the injection of substantial Soviet-bloc aid, both economic and military, into the region — particularly the United Arab Republic, Syria, Iraq, and Yemen."

Mr. McNamara also remarked that the United States had sold Hawk anti-aircraft missiles to Israel to discourage Arab attack. Mr. Nasser, in his speech, said 1965 was "the most crucial year in the Arab struggle."

Where Mr. McNamara blamed Eastern arms shipments for the tension, says the New York Times, Mr. Nasser blamed West German arms shipments to Israel.

Another factor arose after a visit by Assistant Secretary of State Phillips Talbot to Lebanon and Jordan. Arab political sources reported that he had relayed to the two countries an Israeli threat of military action if the Arabs persisted in plans for counter-division of the Jordan. Arab politicians maintain that he was trying to bring pressure in two Arab countries where the United States still has some influence.

Now, moreover, the Arabs are citing Vice President Humphrey's attendance at an Israel Bond rally in Miami Beach, Florida. Arab commentators have interpreted it as a flagrant provocation.

"When the Vice President of the United States volunteers to sell Israel bonds," wrote the correspondent Basem Jisr in the Beirut newspaper, Al Jarida, "no one can any longer wonder why the dialogue between Washington and the Arab states has been 'a dialogue between the deaf.' Nor should one wonder any longer why Soviet diplomacy scores one victory after another at the Arab level."

The Communist newspaper Al Nida summed it all up at Beirut, Lebanon, by asking where the Arabs' friends and enemies were, reports the New York Times. "Ulbricht is in Cairo", it replied "while Harriman is in Israel."

Counter-Boycott Means Tougher Line By Israel

The counter-boycott which Israel began the first week in February is against foreign concerns that have obeyed the Arab economic boycott against Israel. Israeli importers have been officially notified that dealings with seven foreign concerns, writes W. Granger Blair in the New York Times, all telecommunications or electrical equipment companies, will require a special license that will not be forthcoming.

The foreign companies affected by the measure are Allegemeine Elektrizitat Gesellschaft, Telfunken AG, Siemens AG and Imperial Rundfunk und Fernwerk GMBH of West Germany; Pye, Ltd., of Britain; and Hitashi and Matsushita, of Japan.

Avigdor Dagan, of the Foreign Ministry's Political — Economic Planning Department, said the concerns had been penalized because the Government had "proof" that they had given in to Arab pressure. More concerns may be added to the list later.

The seven companies, all of which have previously done business with Israel, were said by Mr. Dagan to have refused either to enter into agreements to provide technical information or to maintain agencies in Israel, preferring instead to deal indirectly through third parties.

Two other concerns — the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of the United States and the Phillips electrical company of the Netherlands — were originally to have been on the list.

Because of Arab demands, Goodyear last summer withdrew its agent in Israel and Phillips refused to enter a technical agreement. Goodyear is said to have agreed to reopen its agency, says the New York Times, and Phillips, as Mr. Dagan put it, has recently shown "understanding."

The counter-boycott is the latest demonstration of a tougher public line being adopted by the Israeli Government on the question of the Arab boycott. Officials contend that the boycott has been a failure as an overall strategy although it has enjoyed some tactical successes.

Premier Levi Eshkol recently urged foreign governments to advise chambers of commerce to

Urged Pre-Marital Training; Married Life As Early Goal

Dr. Lena Levine, psychiatrist, gynecologist, author and marriage counselor, died in New York in her home at 120 Washington Place. Her age was sixty-one years. Dr. Levine, a pioneer in the Planned Parenthood Movement, was associate director of the Margaret Sanger Research Bureau, of New York, says the New York Times, and consulting gynecologist at the Hygiene Clinic of the Brooklyn Jewish Hospital.

She was also a pioneer marriage counselor. For many years she was associated with the late Dr. Hannah and Dr. Abraham Stone in conducting the Marriage Counseling Bureau of the Community Church.

She was closely associated with Margaret Sanger, with whom she often travelled to world conferences. Dr. Levine appeared frequently on national television and radio programs, and lectured extensively at colleges and before various professional and lay audiences.

She was the author or co-author of several books on marriage and sex problems, and contributed articles to magazines.

Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps, last summer invited her, as one of prominent women, to a conference in Washington on the antipoverty program.

She was born in Brooklyn, the daughter of Morris Levine, a clothing manufacturer. She graduated from Hunter College in 1923 and from New York University - Bellevue Medical College in 1927. In 1939 she was married to Dr. Louis Feber, who died in 1942.

After specializing in obstetrics and gynecology in Brooklyn, Dr. Levine studied psychiatry at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, and was certified as a psychiatrist in 1957, says the New York Times. She moved then to Manhattan, where she engaged in psychiatry and marriage counselling as well as gynecology.

Her advice on marriage in her writings and lectures was wide-ranging: "Marriage today", she maintained, "is more challenging, more difficult, and will be more rewarding than marriages have been at any previous time."

Dr. Levine advocated "an annual checkup on marriage," like a yearly medical checkup, declaring that an annual re-evaluation was beneficial to both new and old marriages.

"To insure a stable, lasting marriage today," she asserted, "it is necessary to have adequate, intelligent, pre-marital training."

Instead of looking at housekeeping as an end in itself, Dr. Levine recommended that it be thought of as "the everyday doing and undoing necessary to make a comfortable, wholesome, stimulating environment for rearing children as mature individuals.

"The latest ideas on rearing children," she remarked, "are so strange to many parents that they are liable to feel as conspicuous and uncomfortable with them as they sometimes do in brand-new clothes."

Youngsters, Dr. Levine declared, should be trained from early childhood for the goal of marriage and family life.

In a leap-year lecture she said: "Showing some down-right initiative never made any girl unfeminine."

Dr. Levine was the author of "The Modern Book Of Marriage," "The Premarital Consultation," with Dr. Abraham Stone; "Women Needn't Worry," with Beka Doherty; and "The Frigid Wife"; and

THE COLORFUL JEWISH FESTIVAL OF PURIM

(Prepared by the Commission on Interfaith Activities of Reform Judaism.)

The colorful Jewish Festival of Purim which recalls the ancient Biblical story of Queen Esther and her fight to save her people from Haman, the Persian tyrant, will be marked by Jews all over the world in religious services and ceremonies beginning at sundown, on March 17. The one-day holiday contains a contemporary message universally echoed at this time, the dedication to assure religious freedom for all individuals.

The word "Purim" means "lots" and relates to the method devised by the Persian Prime Minister, Haman, to select the day on which the Jews would be destroyed. Queen Esther, the wife of King Ahasuerus, fought valiantly to save the Jews and rescind the evil deeds of Haman.

The legendary story of how Haman sought the genocide of his country's Jewish population is to be found in the Biblical book of Esther. Early in Jewish history this book was copied on the rolled scrolls called Megilleth. While other biblical texts were similarly preserved, the reading of the Esther Megillah has always received special pre-eminence in the synagogual observance of the day.

Purim is a true holiday. The festive atmosphere predominates. As the scroll is read at the worship services, children and adults are encouraged to use noise-makers to blot out the sound of the name of the tyrannical Haman every time it is mentioned. Costume balls and parties are conducted in the religious schools and Purim plays are traditionally presented at this time.

The threat to the physical survival of the Jewish people as represented by this story was no mere folktale to the Jewish people. Throughout their long and often tortured history, Hamans have periodically sprung up to destroy Jews, using as their principal reason that Jews chose to remain culturally and religiously identified. Hamans in various guises constantly threaten the security of societies, diverse religious and ethnic groups.

Though an ancient festival, Purim's message gives it a contemporary ring which all people, regardless of creed must heed.

Irvin Fane, chairman, of the board of trustees, of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, says:

The lesson of the Purim Holiday, celebrating the triumph of the Jews over the evil Haman who sought their destruction in ancient Persia, is that violence begets violence. Whether in the assassination of a Malcolm X in Harlem or in the war-torn villages of Vietnam, Hamans have arisen in every generation, but those who counseled destruction have themselves been destroyed by their own prescriptions, just as Haman was.

In our day we have learned that the power of evil is no longer embodied in single individuals. Such wrongs as religious and cultural persecution of Jews in the Soviet Union and attacks on freedom in many parts of the world are no longer the responsibility of one man but of many.

There is a Haman in every one of us, too, who must be driven out by the forces of enlightenment and our own aspirations for peace and freedom. We behave as Hamans not only when we are actively violent and behave in bigoted ways but also when we are apathetic and indifferent to violence and lawlessness on the part of others.

From this story of the Purim Holiday we must all be moved to renew the vow to live our ideals in daily practice.

COUNTER-BOYCOTT MEANS TOUGHER LINE BY ISRAEL

ignore threatening letters from Arab boycott offices and to prohibit the chambers of commerce from signing anti-Israel clauses demanded by Arab states.

The Premier also urged foreign governments to give their full support and protection to companies "penalized by Arab countries for not giving in to Arab blackmail."

In a recent speech in the Knesset (Parliament), Deputy Premier Abba Eban observed that "experience teaches us that surrender to the Arab boycott inevitably arouses an unfavorable reaction in many countries where there is friendship" for Israel.

"This unfavorable impression," Mr. Eban added, "often takes the form of a natural attitude of disfavor toward those who support the Arab boycott by surrendering to its dictates."

Some observers interpreted these remarks as a thinly veiled warning to foreign companies not to disregard the potential for reprisal, says the New York Times, of their own Jewish communities, notably that of the United States.

If the F-85 is every inch an Oldsmobile—how come it's shorter?

Good question. With an interesting answer. Money.

F-85's slightly shorter length saves you quite a sum. Which is quite a trick, when you count up the Oldsmobile features you're getting for your money.

Things like Oldsmobile quality. Oldsmobile luxury. Oldsmobile value. Oldsmobile power.

All of this on a short, snappy wheelbase that makes parking spaces a lot easier to find for this Oldsmobile.

And whatever you do, bear in mind that F-85 is an Oldsmobile. And it's priced to become "my first Oldsmobile" to many Canadians this year. Will you be among them? You know, you could be. Ask your dealer. You'll find him listed at the bottom of this advertisement.

DESPITE PERMISSION TO MOSCOW JEWS TO BAKE MATZOH, JEWS ABROAD URGED TO SEND IT AGAIN

Representatives of two Moscow synagogues declared that enough matzoh would be available in the capital this year to satisfy the needs of Jews who wish to observe the dietary laws of Passover. Three bakeries have been in operation since mid-January, reports the New York Times. Both synagogues received permission from the Soviet authorities to set up the bakeries in rented houses to produce matzoh on a non-profit basis for their congregations and for outsiders who put in orders.

The situation in the capital thus is different from that of last year, when many Jews had to forgo the unleavened bread. But private Jewish sources expressed concern that the current situation in Moscow might not be typical of other Jewish communities in the country.

They urged Jews in the United States and Western Europe not to abandon their efforts to ship matzoh to Jewish communities in the Soviet Union.

Communal bakeries have also been set up in Leningrad and "perhaps" in Kiev, these sources said, but they added that in other parts of the Soviet Union Jewish communities had not received permission.

They added that they thought the improvement in Moscow and Leningrad was primarily the result of the publicity that last year's shortage had received abroad.

Some private Jewish citizens said that even with this year's baking operations by the two synagogues, there would be enough matzoh only for a fraction of the Jewish population of the capital, which is estimated at half a million. There are about three million Jews in the Soviet Union.

At the Maryina Roshcha synagogue in Moscow, two dozen men and women, most of them elderly, waited in a room to hand in flour and to place orders for matzoh, says the New York Times. In another room, a second group of elderly persons, who had brought their flour in two days before, were about to receive their allotment of matzoh in big brown cartons. There were two large stacks of full cartons in the room.

The customers paid one ruble 40 kopeks ($1.55) for a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of matzoh. This is what the synagogue figures it pays for wages, transportation, rent for the house and other production costs. [At one New York City supermarket a pound of matzoh costs 31 cents.]

The supervisor said up to 1,100 pounds of matzoh a day was being produced. A second bakery set up by the synagogue in another suburb is turning out about 440 pounds a day.

George Lieb, president of the synagogue, said it hoped to produce 44,000 pounds for its 2,500 regular worshippers and for others who handed in flour and placed orders.

At the Central Synagogue, Moscow's largest, Chief Rabbi Yehudi-Leib Levin said the bakery set up by its congregation in a third suburb was producing 2,200 pounds of matzoh a day.

He said that his congregation had 10,000 regular worshippers and that 6.4 pounds a person was needed, or about 30 tons.

He expects the bakery to produce 45 tons by April 17, the beginning of Passover. The surplus will go to the small Charkizovo Synagogue, which is Moscow's third in size, says the New York Times, and to other Jews who want to observe the Passover dietary laws even though they do not worship regularly.

Throughout the world, many non-religious Jews observe the Passover dietary laws as a matter of custom.

The problem of procuring matzoh for Passover began four years ago, when Soviet state bakeries were ordered to stop baking it.

There has never been a ban on the baking of matzoh by individual families. But few families have the kind of oven needed for matzoh-baking.

Those who were not able to do the baking themselves could not buy matzoh from their friends or neighbors either, since Soviet laws forbid the production and sale of matzoh, or anything else, by private individuals.

These laws, Rabbi Levin said, are the reason the synagogues had to apply for special permission to bake and distribute matzoh. The synagogues have in effect been exempted from the law against private enterprise in baking.

In several instances in recent years Jews have received jail sentences for selling matzoh.

The rabbi said that this summer the Central Synagogue would build its own bakery, says the New York Times. "Construction materials are already there," he said with a nod in the direction of the yard behind the building.

World-Renowned Conductor For 50 Years; Was Mahler Authority

Dr. Heinz Unger, 189 Cameron Avenue, died in Toronto on Thursday, February 25, at the age of sixty-nine years. A conductor for half a century in Germany, Russia, the United States, and most recently the York Concert Society Orchestra, he died of a heart attack. He is survived by his wife, Dr. Hella Unger, who is a dentist; and a daughter, Mrs. David Johnston (Inez), of Ottawa, Ont.; four grandchildren: Michael, aged ten years; Philip, eight; Thomas, five; and Ian, three and one-half. Rabbi Jordan Pearlson officiated at funeral services at Temple Sinai. Interment was at Beth Tzedec Memorial Park. Shiva was private. A conducting scholarship will be established in his memory. The honourary pall-bearers were: George Benjamin, Harry Bergart, A. Burton Freer, Leon Weinstein, Edward Pridham, and Sir Ernest MacMillan. The pall-bearers were: Anthony Antonacci, Isidore Deffer, Eugene Rittich, Stanley Solomon, Harry Stevenson, and Don Whitton. In Toronto for the funeral was Mrs. Ruth Wolff, of Cleveland, Ohio, sister-in-law of Dr. Unger.

Dr. Unger was widely known for his interpretations of the work of Gustav Mahler. He died an hour after completing a rehearsal of Mahler's Sixth Symphony, the Tragic, says the New York Herald Tribune. Although he conducted his first concert in Berlin in 1915, Dr. Unger continued to study law, and actually completed his courses before deciding to make music his career. In 1919, he conducted the Berlin Philharmonic with a program that included Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and First Symphony.

Named permanent conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic he also conducted major orchestras in Vienna, Oslo, Leningrad, Moscow, Odessa, Madrid, and Barcelona before leaving Berlin with the rise of Hitler to power.

A favorite with Russian audiences, Dr. Unger fell into disfavor with Soviet bureaucrats when he refused to speed up works of Bach and Tchaikovsky to "reflect the gay, optimistic spirit of the Russian collectives."

Although he had been for three years a conductor of the Leningrad Radio Orchestra; co-conductor of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra; head of the Leningrad State Choir; and a teacher in the Leningrad State Academy of Music, when Dr. Unger applied for a Soviet visa in 1937 he was turned down, technically because he was a German.

"Although," he pointed out, "because I am a non-Aryan, I have not been welcome in Germany for years." He later published a book of his Russian experiences entitled "Hammer, Sickle, and Baton."

Paradoxically, in 1937, Dr. Unger was also barred from Spain, where he had conducted major orchestras in Madrid and Barlelona. "The only music that is to be heard there now," he said in a New York interview with the Herald Tribune in 1937, "is the moan of the shells."

Since he could not fulfill his engagements in Russia and Spain, Dr. Unger visited the new world traveling widely in North and South America, and in 1948, he moved to Canada. "My decision to move . . . was prompted by my first successful visits here . . . I got the impression of a young, ambitious country where one could do many things for the first time."

He was a pioneer of Mahler's works in Canada, leading the York Society from its early stages as a chamber group to a full-scale orchestra which gave Canadian premieres of several Mahler works.

Four weeks ago, Dr. Unger celebrated his fiftieth year of conducting with a Mahler concert, and was recently honored by the West German government for contributions to music. He had earlier received awards from Mahler and Bruckner societies in Canada and Europe.

As with the thirteen other accused she is said to have acted under the influence of the Nazi ideology that the patients were "useless creatures", whose removal was necessary for the war effort. The accused are further alleged to have deceived the patients and to have hidden the real causes of death from the relatives.

Erdmann said she joined the Nazi Party in 1931 and went to the asylum as a fully trained nurse. In 1945 she managed to flee to Denmark and later nursed for four years in a Swedish hospital, says the London Times. She was on the staff of a hospital near Hamburg when arrested in 1961.

She denied prosecution evidence that about seven women patients were killed a day in a special "death room" of her ward. She told the judge, Dr. Thomas, however, that the patients were given tablets first and, if they did not die, then injections. She was always accompanied by two other nurses, she said. Sometimes the patients struggled and shouted. She denied ever having pacified them by maintaining that the medicine would do them good.

She admitted using the syringe herself but could not say in how many cases. At first she had wondered about the killings, but the doctors, who always selected the victims, had told her that the action was ordered by the state and that she must obey. She trusted the doctors, and anyway was frightened that she might be sent to a concentration camp.

She said she did not know of other nurses who had refused to take part and were not touched. Of the two women doctors at Obrswalde, one was executed in Berlin in 1946, the other disappeared at the end of the war.

Dressed in black and weeping during most of her evidence, Margaret Tunkowski, aged fifty-four, of Schleissheim, Bavaria, told the court: "I always carried out my nursing with love." She is accused of helping to kill in 200 cases.

Erna Elgert, aged fifty-eight, of Hattingen, Rhineland, charged in another two hundred and eighty cases, was also in tears as she gave her life story. The last principal accused was Marta Winter, aged fifty-six, of Traunstein, Bavaria, charged with helping in 1,950 cases, says the London Times. All the accused fled to the west in January, 1945, when the Red Army entered Brandenburg.

It's That Yeshiva U. Chef Again And Purim Recipe

Purim is one of the happiest, noisiest, and tastiest holidays on the Jewish calendar. A one-day festivity which will be celebrated on March 18, the occasion commemorates the deliverance of the Jews from a general massacre planned by the Persian prime minister, Haman. The rescue was achieved through the intervention of Esther and Mordecai, as recorded in the Book of Esther.

One of the Purim delicacies traditional with the holiday is a triangle-shaped cake called "Hamantaschen." Haman derives from the name of the evil prime minister and "taschen" derives from the German word "pockets." Alfred Parker, chief chef at Yeshiva University in New York, and one of the foremost authorities on Jewish cooking, says that the triangular shape of the cakes is most likely due to the old-fashioned three-cornered hat worn by government officials in early times. Haman, himself, could have worn such a hat.

Mr. Parker also volunteered his recipe for the tasty cakes whose preparation he will supervise for some 6,000 Yeshiva University students at the school's three cafeterias:

one half pound sugar
one pound fat or margarine
one and one-half pound flour
two large eggs
one half teaspoon salt
one teaspoon vanilla or lemon
one teaspoon baking powder
thirty-six ounces Hungarian prune filling or poppy seeds

Mix the sugar, fat, and flour. Work in eggs and flavouring to make the dough. Refrigerate for one-half hour. Roll dough into round shapes, then fold edges in to make triangle-shaped biscuits. Into centers place one ounce. Hungarian prune filling or poppy seeds (with raisins and nuts if desired.) Bake in pre-heated oven at 350 degrees for twenty-five minutes. Yield: 36 hamantaschen.

Parker, who puts in a fourteen-hour day at three Yeshiva University cafeterias, estimates he drives about 400 miles a week to oversee the preparation of 10,000 kosher meals served at the University's three cafeterias at Yeshiva University's Lash and Joseph Rubin Residence Hall, Amsterdam Avenue and 185th Street, Manhattan; Stern College for Women, 253 Lexington Avenue, Manhattan; and the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Eastchester Road, and Morris Park Avenue, in the Bronx.

Parker became a cook by accident. At the age of eighteen years he was an engineering student in his native Vienna but was forced to flee when Austria was invaded in 1938. Parker went to a refugee camp in Switzerland where he helped out in the kitchens and gradually began to cook. So well did he learn his new trade that he obtained a job in a Zurich restaurant and, from there, moved to the renowned Hotel Fachschool in Lucerne. He came to the United States in 1947 and stepped into his Yeshiva University role eleven years later.

Yeshiva University, in New York City, is America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices, now in its 79th year. The University provides undergraduate, and professional studies in the arts, sciences, and Jewish learning leading to 18 different degrees and diplomas for some 6,000 men and women. In addition to its extensive academic programs, Yeshiva University conducts community service agencies, and research projects, and publishes several scholarly journals.

Yeshiva University's Main Center is at Amsterdam Avenue and 186th Street, in Manhattan's Washington Heights, with three other major teaching centers in mid-Manhattan and the Bronx.

MORGAN'S '67

GOING UP - EN HAUT

Big things are happening in Montreal. The tempo is quickening. The city is growing. There is a new excitement in the air. Expo '67 is only two years away. At Morgan's big things are happening, too. A great store expansion — planned and conceived to put Morgan's right in step with the exciting Montreal of tomorrow.

Morgan's is on the move. And the Martin family — Mr. and Mrs. Martin and their children, Louise and Robert — are keeping close watch on all that is being done to create the Morgan's of tomorrow — Morgan's '67.

Follow them — and you'll find 140,000 square feet of additional floor space in the new eight-storey extension facing Burnside . . . a new garage capable of parking 3,000 cars per day . . . a new Metro station with direct access to the store . . . new departments . . . new shops . . . new restaurants.

Meanwhile, keep shopping at Morgan's. There will be big improvements, exciting new merchandise. There will also be small inconveniences. Nobody can make such sweeping changes without causing some upsets. But we will do our best to minimize them — and to keep the expansion work from interfering with the traditional Morgan standards of quality, convenience and service.

P.S. — Don't worry! Elevators and escalators will be operating as usual throughout the renovations . . . even if the Martins are taking a more original route to Morgan's!

Follow the Martins to MORGAN'S '67

THE RABBINATE IN ISRAEL

has been cut off from the body of Israel for almost two generations.

How would our Rabbinate deal with the thousands of human problems with which such an influx would confront it: mixed marriages, children whose parents have remarried after civil divorces, and many other difficulties of the same type?

How will they react to increased immigration from America and other Western countries, if it includes many members of Reform congregations?

These are matters of vital and fundamental importance for the unity of Israel. If the rabbis cannot find acceptable solutions, the demand for the institution of civil marriage and divorce may become irresistible.

An irrevocable split between religious and non-religious Jewry would be a tragedy. Already the gulf is wide, but it is not yet impassable. The religious marriage laws are oppressive in a small number of marginal cases — women whose husbands are missing but not proved dead, cohanim who wish to marry divorcees, and the like — but these could surely be solved by a broad-minded interpretation of the halacha.

Many are indifferent to kashrut, but no one objects to kasher meat, and very few feel that the unavailability of bacon and ham is an intolerable deprivation. Even in the non-religious kibbutzim, circumcision is almost universal. There is still a common framework within which orthodox and free-thinkers can live in mutual tolerance — if only our religious leaders would rely less on coercion and more on persuasion and example.

Above all, we must get away from this atmosphere of nagging conflict over formalities and externals, and clear the air for a creative dialogue between the exponents of traditional Judaism and the non-observant majority. With the "normalization" of Israeli society and the inevitable weakening of pioneering challenges, our people are waiting for a new inspiration, a new injection of vitality.

A religious Jewry that sets an example of life guided by an ideal can exercise a wholesome influence even on those who do not accept its ways, if it is not engaged in continual controversy with the rest of the community, if it devotes its energies to winning their respect instead of trying to compel their compliance. Let us hope that the New Year will see some progress in this direction.

THE RABBINATE IN ISRAEL

By Moshe Bar-Natan, of Israel, in the Jewish Frontier, of New York

I suppose this article should have been written a month or two ago, so that it might have appeared in print during the Solemn Days, instead of after they are over, in the same way as magazine editors prepare their Christmas numbers in the height of summer. I hope Frontier readers will forgive me, but I just can't do it that way.

It is in the all-pervading atmosphere of Rosh Hashana: when stores, offices and factories are closed; when the traffic is stilled and the streets empty, except for a few carloads of the non-observant on their way to the countryside or the beach; when the fat festival issues of the newspapers are packed with retrospective surveys of the year's events and heavy pieces on the fundamentals of Judaism; when I take my seat in the synagogue and hear again the warm, heimish festival melodies — it is then that I, like many others, once again feel the need to ask the old, old questions about the place of religion in our life.

Of course, even in the middle of the year what are termed "religious problems" are seldom off the front pages of our newspapers. Two affairs of this nature have just reached their climaxes — both, fortunately, having been concluded with acceptable solutions in time for the advent of the New Year. In both cases rabbinical circles protested vehemently that they were, and would always be, guided purely by considerations of halacha, Jewish religious law, and in both cases the intervention of the secular arm played a decisive part in bringing about a settlement.

No sooner had the issue of the two kitchens in the Zim flagship Shalom (see my article in the Jewish Frontier, May, 1964) been solved by the Government's surrender, than a new quarrel arose over the establishment of a large central abattoir for the south and center of the country at Kiryat Malachi. There was general approval for the initiative of the agricultural settlements in setting up a large, modern slaughterhouse, called Marbek, which would cut out the waste, inefficiency and exploitation of the consumer that have notoriously been rife in this field, while cutting costs and assuring the breeder of a better price for his cattle.

The settlements concerned covered the entire political and religious spectrum, from Hashomer Hatza'ir on the Left, through the religious kibbutzim and moshavim of Hapoel Hamizrachi, to the orthodox Poale Agudath Israel, and it was clear from the beginning that the kashrut arrangements would be such as to satisfy all the requirements of the religious settlements. The National Religious Party itself was closely involved in the scheme.

But the Rabbinate imposed all kinds of conditions, not customary in the case of the existing abattoirs, when it was asked to give its hechsher, permitting the meat to be sold in Tel Aviv and other large centers.

[illegible] certain valid point of halacha was involved. The general pattern of [illegible] has involved the [illegible] of cattle in each locality under the supervision of the local rabbinate, who commanded the confidence of the observant Jewish community. The new set-up meant the transportation of the meat over considerable distances and central supervision without the control of the rabbinate in the places where the consumers lived.

But the public could not help noticing that the economic aspect of the problem seemed to play as conspicuous a role as the religious.

Small, insanitary slaughterhouses and the hundreds of shochtim (slaughterers) employed in them began to feel the chill breezes of powerful competition in price and quality. Local religious councils, which look after the needs of the observant, stood to lose valuable revenue. The negotiations dragged on and on, but no solution seemed to be in sight.

People wondered why such difficult conditions had to be imposed when meat slaughtered under the supervision of the Israeli Rabbinate had to be brought twenty-odd kilometers to Tel Aviv, after frozen beef had been imported across the Atlantic from the Argentine for years and sold without any protest in every part of the country.

The rabbinical hechsher was withdrawn from shops selling Marbek meat but thousands of good Jews continued to buy it without turning a hair — presumably encouraged by the fact that it was almost twenty per cent cheaper than the meat killed at the old slaughterhouses.

Finally, the management of Marbek, representing the farmers, lost patience and appealed to the High Court of Justice against the arbitrary refusal of the Chief Rabbinate to treat them in the same way as other abattoirs. Now came the crisis.

The Chief Rabbinate refused to appear in court, contending that the decisions of a religious authority were not subject to review by any secular institution. The Court ruled that there was no basis for this contumacy. No one but the Court itself, the learned justices explained, was entitled to delimit its own jurisdiction.

If the Rabbinate's decisions were based on purely halachic grounds, the High Court might well refuse to intervene, but it was the duty of the Rabbinate to send its representative to convince the judges that this was indeed the case. In view of the importance of the issue, and out of respect for the religious authorities, the Court refrained from giving its verdict in the presence of one party alone, as it was entitled to do, and adjourned the case to enable the Chief Rabbinate to reconsider its attitude.

The religious papers declared that there could be no surrender. At a rally of rabbis from all over the country held in Jerusalem, speakers proclaimed that the Rabbinate could not give way, for it was guided solely by the immutable dictates of the halacha.

But then, the Rabbinate did give way, though with some attempt at saving face. Rabbi Issar Unterman, recently elected Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi, still holds the post of Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv, as a new incumbent has not yet been elected. In the latter capacity, therefore, he arrived at an agreement which ignored most of the conditions previously insisted on, and the threatened clash with the High Court of Justice was averted.

There were still some anomalies, it is true. The local rabbinate of Jerusalem, which was not a party to the settlement, plastered the billboards with warnings that Marbek's meat could not be regarded as fit for orthodox consumption. So the kashrut of meat killed under the supervision of the Chief Rabbi himself was to be regarded as doubtful in the Holy City, because he was acting in his local and not his national capacity.

The problem of the "Bene Israel" was more intractable and aroused even more widespread and passionate feeling. This community of Jews from India, of whom there are about 8,000 in Israel, lived for centuries isolated from the mainstream of Jewry. Though they stubbornly held on to their Jewishness, they did so without the benefit of rabbinical guidance. Hence doubts arose as to the validity of their marriages and — more important — their divorces.

Like many other problems of our people, the question did not trouble the dominant Ashkenazi communities of the Western world, who remained blissfully unconcerned with the existence of Oriental Jewry until our own East and West met as a result of the establishment of independent Israel. With the growing number of intercommunal marriages in Israel, however, the problem became acute.

Some rabbis refused to sanction unions between young men and women from the Bene Israel and the members of other communities. These Jews from India, who had clung to Judaism for generations under difficult conditions, and who had responded en masse to the call of the Jewish State, found themselves treated as second-class Jews.

The Rabbinate, to do it credit, made a considerable effort to deal with the situation. The late Chief Rabbi Herzog devoted intensive halachic and historical research to the question.

Chief Rabbi Nissim took up the matter and, finally, about three years ago, the Chief Rabbinate decided that the Bene Israel were to be regarded as Jews in all respects, but that in case of any marriage between one of them and someone from another community inquiries must be made as to the parentage of the Bene Israel partner, going back as far as practicable, to ensure that his or her pedigree was free from all taint of forbidden unions or remarriage after an invalid divorce.

On the intervention of the Ministry of Religious Affairs, central marriage registrars were appointed who could be appealed to in any case where a local rabbi proved recalcitrant.

But it was not enough. The Bene Israel still resented being singled out for special treatment. They complained, with a considerable measure of justice, that there was not much point in declaring that they were Jews in all respects if at the same time special investigations were to be carried out into their ancestry. It did not matter, it seemed, so long as the suspected contamination remained within their own community and did not spread to the rest of Jewry.

They began to protest. About a year ago, a group of Bene Israel families encamped in the street opposite the Jewish Agency offices and demanded either the repeal of the directives or repatriation to India. It was only after the Prime Minister assured their leaders of his sympathy and promised to use his influence to secure the removal of their grievances that they agreed to go back to their homes.

Months went by, but the Rabbinate did not budge; so the Bene Israel repeated their demonstration. For weeks, men, women, and children squatted on the pavements in the heart of the capital, sheltering at night under improvised tents, a living reproach to Israel's conscience.

This time public opinion was aroused. With the exception of the religious groups, all the political parties took up their case. The Opposition requisitioned a special session of the Knesset, and Mapai, the Israel Labor Party, fell into line.

Owing largely to the patient diplomacy of Prime Minister Eshkol, even the National Religious Party, which is represented in the Government coalition, agreed to a Government resolution calling upon the Chief Rabbinate to do all in its power to remove the sense of discrimination which the Bene Israel felt as a result of the directives (though their press abused the strikers as trouble-makers and again proclaimed the inviolability of the halacha).

The Knesset adopted the Government's formula by an overwhelming majority, the Opposition abstaining because it did not go far enough. Only the rigidly orthodox Agudat Israel voted against it.

Again a chink was found in the iron wall of the halacha, and the Rabbinate, after protesting that nothing could be done, found a compromise formula, which called for investigation in all cases of doubtful pedigree, without mentioning the Bene Israel as such.

There is no doubt that, had it not been for the obstinacy and endurance of these simple people, public opinion and the political parties would not have taken up the matter again, and had it not been for the almost unanimous pressure of the Press and the Legislature the Rabbinate would have given way.

The impression the man in the street gets from these episodes, coming as they do after a series of similar clashes, is that our spiritual leaders are not very different from our politicians.

In controversies over legislation, or taxation, or salaries, we are accustomed to this kind of tug-of-war, beginning with demands on the one side and a refusal to budge on the other, and ending — after an energy-consuming struggle — in a compromise which many people feel might have been achieved at the start with much less waste of effort.

In such matters, perhaps something of the kind is inevitable; it is only by a trial of strength that each side can find out how far the other is prepared to go.

But a rabbinate which is repeatedly in conflict with the general sense of justice, which seems to be influenced by economic considerations and party interests as much as by religious principles, and whose power is maintained by political pressure on the Government, cannot command general respect.

It is not a matter of some dark rabbinical plot to bind the nation in halachic fetters. I have no doubt that the Rabbinate is sincere in declaring that it is bound by the provisions of religious law.

But there was a time when the halacha was much more flexible, when the instruments of interpretation were used to adapt its provisions to the needs of the day, while keeping the principles intact. Never was there a time when a revolutionary change in the conditions of Jewish life called more urgently for a renewal of this process.

Never, since the decline of the great Babylonian schools, was so much rabbinical and halachic authority concentrated in one center. Never was there a time when bold religious leadership was more urgently required — and more sadly lacking.

We are not at the end of the ingathering of the exiles. Russian Jewry is not yet irrevocably lost. We have witnessed tremendous changes in the Soviet Union during the past decade; no one can tell when we may be faced with a growing stream of immigration from that great community which

OF COURSE! THERE ARE PLENTY OF JEWISH BLACKSMITHS

Recently in a discussion between a non-Jewish salesman and myself the talk turned to the disappearance of the small blacksmith shop. The salesman showed surprise when I mentioned that my father had a small blacksmith shop. He said it must have been the only Jewish blacksmith shop in town. He thought Jews did not go in for a dirty, hard type of work. I then further surprised the salesman by rhyming off the Jewish blacksmiths in our own neighbourhood, on D'Arcy Street near Spadina, name unknown; Yalofsky, at Markham Street, just north of Queen Street; another Yalofsky on Tecumseh Street; Levine, at Euclid Street, just north of Queen Street; Louis Back, at Pearl Street; Rubin, at Elizabeth Street, just north of Queen Street; Litvack on Edward Street; Wallis, farther east on Edward Street, (bowling alleys now); Cohen, at Peter and Wellington Streets.
